1 Why the case information from PACER is needed

I am conducting scholarly research on the efficiency of Chapter 11 corporate bankruptcy. I will use Chapter 11 bankruptcy docket reports to assess how various motions filed during bankruptcy affect bankruptcy outcomes. I will also analyze how firm locations correlate with bankruptcy outcomes. I will summarize my results in scholarly research papers that I will submit to academic journals. This exercise requires a large sample size to get a comprehensive picture of the efficiency of the corporate bankruptcy system. It is my understanding that obtaining such a sample of bankruptcy dockets is only possible through PACER.

2 How the case information from PACER will be used

My exercise will compare bankruptcies filed in a firm's home state to bankruptcies filed outside of a firm's home state. For this exercise to work, I thus need a sample of all corporate bankruptcies. Using the Federal Judicial Center's Integrated Database (IDB),¹ I have obtained 147,843 case numbers corresponding to Chapter 11 cases. Since individuals use Chapter 7 and Chapter 13, I believe these correspond to business bankruptcies. For each of these 147,843 cases, I hope to pull the docket report.

¹See <https://www.fjc.gov/research/idb>.

Given the large number of cases, I will pull this information using web scraping programs. I am happy to cooperate with court employee requests in scraping this data.

Using this information, I will construct a dataset, conduct statistical analysis using the data, and present the results in scholarly papers and presentations.² I will eventually submit these papers to academic journals. I will not sell the data for profit, transfer it or redistribute it on the internet, or use it for commercial purposes.

3 Why an exemption is necessary

If I pull the docket report, that will cost up to $3.00 per case. It could thus cost as much as $443,000 to pull this information, which I cannot afford. For this reason, I would be extremely grateful if you would consider my request for an exemption from fees. Thank you so much for considering my request.

Sincerely,
Samuel Antill
