Introduction and Analytical Overview

These historic bankruptcy cases have been characterized by professional excellence and creative problem solving leading to negotiation, cooperation and the ultimate compromise of conflicting positions. One commendable administrative achievement is that professional fees for estate professionals have been managed so smoothly in uncontested proceedings. Disputes relating to the approval of these fees have been resolved and have not burdened the Court. That is a remarkable feat given the sheer magnitude of the professional activities and associated fees and expenses that together exceed $1.8 billion.

Efficient and fair handling of fee allowance procedures has resulted in an unbroken pattern of uncontested applications for compensation of the retained professionals. Even applications based on substantial contribution claims have been approved without controversy.¹

This transparent and consensual fee review and approval process worked well and is a tribute to the professionals involved and to the constructive and positive role played by the Fee Committee appointed in these cases.

That record of avoided conflict and pragmatic compromise has now been broken in a contested matter in which the United States Trustee for Region 2 (the “UST”) challenges the legal right of members of a committee appointed under Section 1102 of the Bankruptcy Code – i.e. an official committee – to be paid reasonable compensation for legal services rendered to the individual members of that committee by their own attorneys when those fees, subject to findings of reasonableness, have been awarded under Lehman’s confirmed plan of reorganization (the “Plan”).² The issue presented, whether to allow the professional fees of members of the Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors (the “Committee”), including two indenture trustees (collectively, the “Applicants”), focuses attention on the suitability of using plan provisions as a means to authorize the payment of professional fees where it is unclear – or even doubtful – that such fees could be recovered as administrative expenses if payment provisions had not been specified in the Plan.

Given the resolution of each of the other prior disagreements relating to professional fees, this isolated fee dispute stands out from the rest and must be about more than the fees themselves. A total of approximately $26 million is at stake, but in the context of the Lehman cases, that is not much money.³ This fight is about principle and the proper way to interpret

³ No economic stakeholder has complained about payment of these fees. The Plan providing for these payments was accepted by an overwhelming percentage of creditors and confirmed in a consensual hearing on December 6, 2011. distinct sections of the Bankruptcy Code in relation to enabling language in the Plan that authorizes distributions of cash from the Lehman estate to individual Committee members and certain indenture trustees to pay for their counsel fees. The Court assumes that Section 6.7 of the Plan detailing the entitlement to these distributions was added purposefully to give the Applicants greater assurance that they actually would receive these payments notwithstanding sections of the Bankruptcy Code indicating that payment of such counsel fees, in the ordinary course, would not be allowable as administrative expenses.⁴

As a practical matter, members of the Committee would not have been able to claim these payments with any degree of confidence were it not for the implementing language in the Plan. That is due to the structure of Sections 503(b)(3) and 503(b)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code. Under these sections, members of an official committee are not included in the list of creditors who qualify to claim administrative expense treatment for counsel fees for having made a substantial contribution in a bankruptcy case.

Section 6.7 of the Plan (securing the right to such payments for the Applicants) introduces what amounts to a contractual patch designed to cure these statutory omissions, and therein lies the rub. There are important appearance and policy issues at stake here: should members of any official committee who by statute have a central role in plan negotiations be allowed to use the plan process for their own financial gain and should they be able to realize benefits that the Bankruptcy Code ordinarily would not sanction? The Court believes this question animates the current dispute and is the reason compromise has not been possible.

These big picture concerns may explain motivations but do not change the analysis. The inclusion of Section 6.7 as a mechanism to pay these professional fees is but one example of the creativity of the plan process itself, especially in a large and complex – and, in this instance, the largest ever – chapter 11 case. The Bankruptcy Code allows and even encourages such creativity within the broad outlines of what a plan must include (Section 1123(a)) or may include (Section 1123(b)). The available structuring alternatives are unconstrained but not limitless. The provisions of a plan simply must not be inconsistent with provisions of the Bankruptcy Code.

In establishing a right to receive reasonable payments under a plan that otherwise would not have been available to the Committee members if they had sought to recover such payments as allowed administrative expenses, Section 6.7 illustrates the ability to use language in a plan to achieve desired economic outcomes. It highlights the distinction between the types of administrative expenses that parties may claim against a debtor entity under applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code and other permissible expenses, not catalogued within the statute itself, that still may be identified and paid by the estate pursuant to a consensual plan of reorganization. The plan language provides for detailed treatment of the claims of stakeholders and becomes the means to provide for payment of certain expenses that are not specified in the Bankruptcy Code.

The question presented is whether that result should be permitted under the circumstances presented and whether a plan legitimately may provide for payment of the legal expenses of individual members of an official committee if the very same sort of expenses would not have been payable if sought as part of the process of allowing administrative expenses. Stated differently, can a plan properly circumvent the apparent restrictions on administrative expense treatment for professional compensation claims of this sort? The Court concludes that these payments under a plan are proper, provided that the payments are reasonable and not inconsistent with applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code. Here, the proposed payments of professional fees incurred by individual members of the Committee, even though not expressly provided by Section 503(b), are also not inconsistent with Section 503(b)⁵.

In reaching this conclusion, the Court rejects as overly restrictive the reading of Section 503(b) advanced by the UST in her objection to the requested fees. The UST's argument is built on the proposition that Section 503(b) has a controlling and preclusive impact and is the exclusive pathway by which a member of an official committee can ever be entitled to receive compensation for legal fees incurred while serving on such a committee. Under her interpretation, the limitations in Sections 503(b)(3) and 503(b)(4) are disqualifying for members of the Committee. She submits that they both eliminate the potential for members of an official committee to receive payment for counsel fees under these sections and foreclose the option for such compensation to be paid permissibly by any other means. Her argument, if accepted, would negate in absolute terms the possibility of plan treatment that might offer to compensate members of an official committee for their personal professional fees under any and all circumstances.

That reading goes too far and confuses the capacity to assert a substantial contribution claim with the ability to be granted the functional equivalent of such a right to payment under a plan that has been ratified so overwhelmingly by creditors. The flaw in the UST's argument is the embedded assumption that the administrative claim formulation of Section 503(b) functions as a trump card that extends across the Bankruptcy Code to block the formulation of a plan that proposes independent grounds for granting comparable payment rights. There is no basis for such a contention. Moreover, the objection of the UST discounts both the enormous leeway granted to the architects of plans under Section 1123(b)(6) of the Bankruptcy Code (providing that a plan may include any other appropriate provision not inconsistent with the applicable provisions of this title) and the authority and discretion of the bankruptcy court to approve payments in connection with a plan as being reasonable under Section 1129(a)(4).

Every chapter 11 plan in a complex business case necessarily is a one of a kind formulation, the product of negotiations that are peculiar to the fact pattern, requirements, circumstances, business realities and political pressures of the case. In the negotiations that produced the Plan, the parties involved succeeded in constructing a pragmatic global settlement that, among other things, conspicuously provided for the Applicants to receive the now-disputed payments. The fact that the parties agreed to include Section 6.7 in the Plan during the course of their negotiations is a strong indication that the parties considered the proposed treatment to be justified and that alone really should end the discussion provided that the section is not inconsistent with the Bankruptcy Code. How this feature came to be part of the Plan does not matter for purposes of this decision. The undisputed fact remains that payment of these fees became an element of the grand bargain that all creditors voted on and accepted by a landslide.

When it comes to plan provisions, the variations are virtually without limit, and properly so. To fulfill its reorganization purposes, a plan must be an endlessly adaptable tool that fits the particular needs and dynamics of each case. The free expression of plan proponents should not be restrained except to the extent of complying with the requirements of the Bankruptcy Code that govern plan content. Section 503(b) is not a straitjacket, and the provisions of that section that directly govern the allowance of administrative claims do not control the plan process and are not inconsistent with more the more liberal treatment prescribed in the Plan.

For the reasons stated in this decision, the Court agrees with the Applicants and finds that the Plan provision in question is a proper means to provide for payment of the requested fees. Any unresolved disputes as to reasonableness of the fees sought by individual Applicants shall be the subject of further proceedings should that be necessary. The UST is directed to meet and confer with the Applicants in an effort to resolve any open issues regarding reasonableness.

The following two sections of this decision discuss the procedural setting in which this contested matter arises and the legal authority that supports the Court's conclusion.

Procedural Background for the Fee Dispute

The issues presented in this contested fee dispute are linked to the successful negotiations that culminated in the formulation and confirmation of the Plan. This process of negotiation and consensual dispute resolution was unprecedented in its complexity and involved exceptionally difficult questions that implicated distribution rights and creditor treatment. Issues in relation to substantive consolidation and re-characterization were overwhelmingly complicated and unpredictable. A contested confirmation would have been virtually impossible to litigate.

Settlements were needed and emerged as the only practical alternative to avoid a monumental and unmanageable confirmation battle.

These settlements are the foundation of the Plan, and the Applicants individually take some of the credit for having helped to bring the chapter 11 cases of Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. and its affiliated debtors (the “Debtors”) to a successful conclusion. Presumably in recognition of these efforts, the Debtors agreed to pay all of the reasonable fees and expenses, including attorneys’ fees, incurred by the Applicants in connection with the chapter 11 cases.

This commitment of the Debtors is memorialized in Section 6.7 of the Plan which provides that

[s]ubject to entry of the Confirmation Order, the reasonable fees and expenses (including attorneys fees) of (a) the indenture trustee for the Senior Notes and the Subordinated Notes and (b) the individual members of the Creditors’ Committee, in each case, incurred in their capacities as indenture trustee or member of the Creditors’ Committee, respectively, shall, (i) to the extent incurred and unpaid by a Debtor prior to the Effective Date, be Allowed as Administrative Expense Claims and paid by the Debtors in accordance with the Debtor Allocation Agreement upon application to and subject to approval of the Bankruptcy Court, and (ii) to the extent incurred after the Effective Date, be Allowed as Administrative Expense Claims and paid by the Debtors on a monthly basis upon the submission of fee statements without further order of the Bankruptcy Court.

Plan § 6.7.

In November 2011, the UST filed an objection to the confirmation of the Plan (the “UST Objection”). ECF No. 21640. Among the points raised is the argument that payment of the fees and expenses under Section 6.7 violated the Bankruptcy Code. The UST asserted that Section 503(b) of the Bankruptcy Code is the proper standard for evaluating the reasonable fees and expenses of members of the Committee. See UST Objection. As a result of subsequent negotiations, the UST agreed to withdraw the UST Objection upon a reservation of her rights with respect to “the appropriate legal standard for such applications, and any objection that payment of such fees is unauthorized under the Bankruptcy Code and the Bankruptcy Rules.” Confirmation Order ¶ 74.

The Applicants filed the Application on January 30, 2012, and immediately thereafter filed a Notice of Amendment to Omnibus Application of (I) Individual Members of Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors and (II) Indenture Trustees Pursuant to Section 1129(a)(4), or, Alternatively, Sections 503(b)(3)(D) and 503(b)(4) of Bankruptcy Code for Payment of Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses (the “Amendment”). ECF No. 24881. The Amendment corrects the amounts of fees and expenses requested in the Application. Amendment ¶¶ 2, 3, Ex. A. The corrected aggregate amount is $26.3 million. Id.

The Applicants assert that the substantial contribution standard of Section 503(b) is applicable only to compensation requests that are not otherwise agreed to by a debtor or provided for in a plan. See Application ¶ 4. They also argue that nothing in Section 503(b) dictates that it is the only mechanism for approval of administrative expenses for professional fees and expenses. Id. Therefore, they contend, courts properly may look to other potentially applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, including Section 1129(a)(4).⁶ The Applicants argue in the alternative that they have, in fact, made a substantial contribution to the success of these chapter 11 cases.

The UST filed an Omnibus Objection of the United States Trustee to Creditors’ Applications for Reimbursement of Professional Fees and Expenses (the “UST Fee Objection”) on February 15, 2012. ECF No. 25394. In the UST Fee Objection, the UST argues that Section 503(b) determines the right to professional fees in this instance by specifying procedures for approval of fees and expenses incurred by a member of an official committee. UST Fee

Objection 12. The UST asserts that Section 503(b) does not allow for the payment of the requested fees to members of the Committee and that the indenture trustees have failed to show a substantial contribution in these cases. Id. The UST quarrels with the attempt here to bypass the requirements of Section 503(b) in favor of the more general, non-specific provisions of Section 1129(a)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code and makes a number of other arguments challenging the right of the Applicants to payment of the requested fees. Id.

After a period of negotiation, on November 15, 2012 the Applicants submitted their Reply to the UST Objection (the “Applicant Reply”). ECF No. 32129. Although the Applicant Reply dealt with fee requests of the individual Applicants, the pleading was signed and filed by Milbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy LLP (“Milbank”), as counsel to the Committee. The UST expressed concern regarding Milbank’s role in performing services on behalf of the Applicants as a group and this prompted another round of briefing on the question of whether Milbank had acted for the Applicants in a manner that exceeded its authority as counsel to the Committee.

The UST pressed the issue in a supplemental objection in which it argued that Milbank should not be permitted to represent individual members of the Committee. The UST complained that Milbank had a conflict of interest associated with having to review the fees on behalf of the Committee at the same time that it was also seeking payment of those fees on behalf of the individual committee members.

On December 17, 2012, the Committee filed a response to these assertions, and shortly thereafter the Court heard oral argument at a hearing held on December 19, 2012. At the outset of that hearing, the Court dealt with the question of Milbank’s role in the proceeding, stating that “I’m going to permit Milbank to act as it has acted throughout these cases as counsel for the [C]ommittee and I’m going to leave it to Mr. Dunne and his partners and his firm to conclude whether the conduct of today's hearing is or is not conduct on behalf of his actual client, the [C]ommittee, or conduct which is on behalf of members of the [C]ommittee. He has asserted that he is acting on behalf of the [C]ommittee and I accept that." 12/19/2012 Tr. 58:2-10.

Discussion

The structure of Section 503(b) and its impact upon claims for fees by members of the Committee

Section 503(b) of the Bankruptcy Code lists various categories of allowed administrative expenses. Section 503(b)(3) in particular sets forth a basis for allowing administrative expenses for the actual, necessary expenses, other than compensation and reimbursement specified in paragraph (4) of this subsection, incurred by –

- (A) a creditor that files a petition under section 303 of this title;
- (B) a creditor that recovers, after the court's approval, for the benefit of the estate any property transferred or concealed by the debtor;
- (C) a creditor in connection with the prosecution of a criminal offense relating to the case or to the business or property of the debtor;
- (D) a creditor, an indenture trustee, an equity security holder, or a committee representing creditors or equity security holders other than a committee appointed under section 1102 of this title, in making a substantial contribution in a case under chapter 9 or 11 of this title;
- (E) a custodian superseded under section 543 of this title, and compensation for the services of such custodian; or
- (F) a member of a committee appointed under section 1102 of this title, if such expenses are incurred in the performance of the duties of such committee.

11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(3) (emphasis added).

Section 503(b)(4) provides for the reimbursement of certain professional fees incurred by parties listed in Section 503(b)(3). Specifically, Section 503(b)(4) provides reimbursement for the reasonable compensation for professional services rendered by an attorney or an accountant of an entity whose expense is allowable under subparagraph (A), (B), (C), (D), or (E) of paragraph (3) of this subsection, based on the time, the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, and the cost of comparable services other than in a case under this title, and reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses incurred by such attorney or accountant.

11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(4).

Although expenses incurred by a member an official committee qualify for reimbursement under Section 503(b)(3)(F), that entitlement does not extend to reasonable compensation for professional fees under Section 503(b)(4).⁷ When read together, these two subsections enable members of an official committee to obtain reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with service on a committee (such as out of pocket travel expenses for attending a meeting of an official committee) but, by omission, appear to exclude the possibility of obtaining administrative expense treatment for professional services rendered to a member of an official committee because subparagraph (F) is not mentioned in Section 503(b)(4).

The UST views this missing reference to subparagraph (F) as definitive and dispositive. Under her interpretation, the fact that subparagraph (F) is not included within the list of entities that may assert an administrative claim for professional fees completely eliminates the possibility that such fees may be reimbursed under any circumstance.⁸ This conclusion, while a fair reading of the internal standards applicable to allowance of administrative claims, fails to take into account the ability, addressed below, to identify other means to provide for reimbursement of such professional fees.

Prescribing the payment of professional fees under provisions of a plan

Section 1123(b) sets forth a list of those provisions that may be included in a reorganization plan. Section 1123(b)(6) is a broadly-worded, open-ended invitation to the creativity of those who are engaged in drafting plan language. This catch-all provides that a plan may “include any other appropriate provision not inconsistent with the applicable provisions of [the Bankruptcy Code].” 11 U.S.C. § 1123(b)(6). This amounts to a green light for those engaged in plan negotiations. Just about anything can be included, provided that the terms of the plan do not run afoul of applicable bankruptcy law.

Section 105(a) of the Bankruptcy Code also authorizes the bankruptcy court to “issue any order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of [the Bankruptcy Code].” 11 U.S.C. § 105(a). This general repository of power gives the bankruptcy court a great deal of flexibility to confirm a reorganization plan so long as the plan does not otherwise violate the Bankruptcy Code. Unites States v. Energy Res. Co., Inc., 495 U.S. 545, 549 (1990) (“These statutory directives are consistent with the traditional understanding that bankruptcy courts, as courts of equity, have broad authority to modify creditor-debtor relationships” (citing Pepper v. Litton, 308 U.S. 295, 303-04 (1939); United States National Bank v. Chase National Bank, 331 U.S. 28, 36 (1947); Katchen v. Landy, 382 U.S. 323, 327 (1966)).⁹

Therefore, the Court analyzes Section 6.7 of the Plan recognizing the importance of creativity and flexibility in the plan formulation process. The Court approaches the issue of plan treatment for professional fees from the point of view that plan terms are valid unless those terms are inconsistent with another applicable provision of the Bankruptcy Code. Plans need to be custom-made so that they have the necessary components to respond to the special circumstances of each case. The division of labor is simple: the proponents propose plan terms, parties in interest have an opportunity to object to those terms and the bankruptcy court has the power to assess whether provisions contained in the plan are appropriate and consistent with applicable law.

The Plan provision now before the Court – Section 6.7 – necessarily invokes Section 1129(a)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code. That section provides a mechanism for judicial review of payments made or to be made by the debtor in connection with a reorganization plan.

Specifically, Section 1129(a)(4) requires that

[a]ny payment made or to be made ... by the debtor ... for services or for costs and expenses in or in connection with the case, or in connection with the plan and incident to the case, has been approved by, or is subject to the approval of, the court as reasonable.

11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(4).

The Applicants argue that Section 6.7 of the Plan authorizing the reimbursement of Applicants' professional fees is a provision that easily fits within the broad spectrum of Section 1123(b)(6) and is not inconsistent with provisions that govern the allowance of administrative expenses. The Court agrees. Plan provisions, especially in a unique setting such as this, are to be favored and respected unless those provisions can be shown to be contrary to law. In this instance, the provision authorizing payment of professional fees does not conflict with sections of the Bankruptcy Code that, read literally, would not allow for the payment of the same fees as administrative expenses.

Section 6.7 provides for a consensual reimbursement of professional fees to members of the Committee, not the granting of an administrative expense priority. The difference is a subtle one, but quite real. While the provision under the Plan may be another structure to achieve the same basic objective (payment of fees), the path chosen is not improper simply because it provides an alternative method to secure payment of the fees. The fact that administrative claim status may not be allowed does not mean that an agreed payment under a fully consensual plan should not be permitted. The confirmation of the Plan substitutes all of the protections that are needed, and the proposed payments to reimburse professionals retained by the Applicants need only to be subjected to the Court's approval as "reasonable" under Section 1129(a)(4).

The Adelphia decision supports the conclusion that payments are proper under Section 6.7

The Applicants rely heavily on Judge Gerber's decision in In re Adelphia Commc's Corp., 441 B.R. 6 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2010). In Adelphia, fourteen ad hoc committees and certain individual creditors sought reimbursement for professional fees pursuant to a plan provision similar to Section 6.7 of the Plan. Id. at 8-9. The applicants in Adelphia, as part of a global settlement, negotiated for plan treatment in which they would receive reimbursement for professional fees incurred in connection with the chapter 11 cases. Id. at 10-11. Upon confirmation, the applicants submitted fee applications arguing that such applications were only subject to a reasonableness review under Section 1129(a)(4) of the Bankruptcy Code. Id. at 11. The United States Trustee objected to these fee applications making substantially similar arguments to the ones being made here. Id.

In Adelphia, Judge Gerber held that "to the extent that the requested fees are reasonable, and the requirements of section 1129(a)(4) likewise are complied with, [the plan provision providing for reimbursement for certain creditors' professional fees] is permissible, and the [Bankruptcy] Code permits the [applicants'] reasonable fees to be recovered under that provision without showing compliance with sections 503(b)(3) or (4)." Id. at 19. His reasoning, while addressed to members of ad hoc committees rather than official committees, is persuasive and applies to the present controversy.

Plan provisions must be clearly in conflict with applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code to become unenforceable. The standards of Section 1123(b)(6) are liberal, and deliberately so. To state this colloquially, a “tie” should go to the “runner” with respect to whether a plan provision is valid. In this instance, that suggests that the benefit of any doubt properly should be given to the plan proponent unless a troubling inconsistency with other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code is manifest. That is not the case here. Indeed, the provisions of Section 6.7 state an independent basis for reimbursing the requested professional fees that stand on their own and that are not inconsistent with the restrictions contained in Section 503(b).

The UST argues that the circumstances applicable to Section 6.7 of the Plan are distinguishable from Adelphia because the applicants in Adelphia were creditors in ad hoc committees while the Applicants are members of an official committee under Section 1102 of the Bankruptcy Code. However, the exclusion of such professional fees from Section 503(b)(4) does not equate to complete prohibition. Section 503(b)(4) is silent on the subject and simply fails to mention payment of such fees. As noted in Adelphia, “[S]ection 503(b) does not provide that it is the only way by which individual creditors’ fees may be absorbed by an estate.” 441 B.R. at 14-15 (emphasis in original). That quotation sums it up well: regardless of whether the focus is an ad hoc committee or an official committee, Section 503(b) does not prohibit the payment of professional fees by means other than the allowance of administrative expenses.

Applications for the payment of administrative expenses as provided in Section 503(b) and the right to payments made consensually under a plan are clearly distinct. As noted in Adelphia, there are basic differences between a claim for reimbursement of professional fees under Section 503(b) and payments that are made pursuant to a plan of reorganization. Requests for payment under Section 503(b) are “nonconsensual in nature,” 441 B.R. at 12, but a payment “made in connection with a reorganization plan” ordinarily will be made on a consensual basis. Id. at 13.

But this is not just an abstract discussion about the significance of consensual plan treatment. The Plan that includes Section 6.7 offers a vivid example of a spectacularly successful plan process. The Plan was accepted in a lopsided affirmative vote by a vast majority of accepting creditors, and their votes ratified the compromises embodied in the Plan and all of its provisions. One reasonable conclusion from that vote is that the creditors have spoken, virtually with one voice, and have chosen not to object to the payments that the UST has determined to oppose. The fact of informed voting by sophisticated creditors distinguishes payments that the Debtors propose to make under the Plan from those that might be claimed in the ordinary course as administrative expenses. Here the payments are specified in the Plan and, but for the arguments advanced by the UST, seem not to be the least bit controversial. The acceptances of the Plan are a strong, one-sided referendum in support of paying the fees requested by the Applicants.¹⁰

Conclusion

For the reasons stated, the UST Fee Objection is not well-founded and is overruled. It is based on the proposition that Section 503(b) standards for allowing administrative expenses necessarily must govern the right of individual members of an official committee to receive reimbursements for their professional expenses. That mixes up the test for being able to assert an administrative expense claim with the right to receive a payment that the Debtors voluntarily have proposed to make under the Plan and that may be authorized in accordance with Section 1129(a)(4).

¹⁰ The UST argues that the Plan was not consensual because the UST preserved her ability to object to Section 6.7. UST Fee Objection 20-21. While true, that reservation of rights does nothing to diminish the fact that the Plan is an outstanding example of consensus achieved and conflict avoided.

A consensual payment offered by a debtor is not the same as and should not be confused with the treatment of a claim made against a debtor. Section 6.7 is an example of such a consensual payment offered to the Applicants in consideration of their extraordinary services in the Lehman cases that contributed to the success of the Plan. Provisions such as this are not standard, but they are permissible. While permissible, payment of professional fees to members of an official committee under a plan is a practice that, in the Court's judgment, should be reserved for those special occasions of exceptional justification comparable to those presented by the Applicants.

The Applicants shall meet and confer with the UST in an effort to resolve any remaining questions as to reasonableness of the fees granted under Section 6.7 of the Plan. Unresolved questions shall be submitted to the Court for a determination of reasonableness in accordance with Section 1129(a)(4).
